Nem veni Nem veni is a traditional Gypsy song, sung in the Romanian language. The exact origin and meaning of the song is unknown, but it is believed that the Gypsies brought it to Romania in the Middle Ages. There is a variant of this song (called Cântec neamțesc) that is originally sung in the native language of the Carpatho-Ruthenian people (or Mordvin people in the Ukraine). Romanian transliteration of the song title is "Neamțu" and it is also a popular 1970s Romanian song with a girl's name Neamțu. pattern recognition and is intended more particularly for the recognition of human facial expressions. Human emotion has been recognized for some time and, in many cases, the recognition is made quantifiable. One such quantification scheme starts with the recognition of certain facial expressions. The recognition of such facial expressions is commonly based on the recognition of facial features such as the eye region, nose region, mouth region, head region, etc. The recognition of facial expressions has been found to be useful for purposes of security as well as for automatic face retrieval purposes. Such face recognition schemes are described for example in an article entitled "Faces and the Law: Computers and the Case of Gagnon" by Edward A. Jenkins, Rev. Stat. Comput. 3, 3, 219-268 (1994). As described in said article, a computer system is presently used to recognize the appearance of an individual under surveillance by eye region, nose region, or both regions combined. The classification into three basic expressions (fear, joy, and anger) requires an overall likelihood criterion, which consists of combining the criteria for each of the regions (eyebrow, eyebrow, eye, etc). Currently, such a computational method and system for recognizing facial expressions is based on a fixed set of templates, for example, shapes indicative of head regions, eyes, etc. The template matching method, as commonly practiced, is accomplished by locating an initial candidate object in the pattern to be searched and then using the position of the centre of mass (in the first approximation) of the object as a template. The template is iteratively displaced from a fixed reference point in the pattern until the best coincidence with the center of mass of the measured pattern occurs. In the prior art, the location of the center of mass of the pattern to be processed is determined once and for all with reference to a fixed point,
