"Four score and seven years ago our forefathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in. freedom, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." - Abraham Lincoln - (Jefferson Davis and Abraham Lincoln | Wikipedia) Today, in his inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln played his part in the pre-Civil War political debate on how to ensure the survival and integrity of the United States. The great issue in the United States as in Europe at the time was the nature of the relationship between the individual and the State. By seeking to suppress local autonomies within the United States, the proponents of Manifest Destiny, aided and abetted by southern planters and slave holders, sought to add to the forces of Europe's Christian societies their own "civilizing" societies, modeled along the lines of Roman Republicanism. While most Americans still profess their adherence to a version of British individualism, in contrast to European authoritarian structures which had been born with the French Revolution's rejection of the Christian society of God's creation, the Civil War is also seen by many as a "second revolution" that freed the individual from this political bondage. As President, Abraham Lincoln was well aware that the conflict should be based on "slavery" not "civil liberties." However, he was convinced that the spread of democracy in the United States would be a key to the survival and integrity of the United States as a world power. Below is a video of Abraham Lincoln's first inaugural address. Today, the United States with it's surviving citizenry of post-1940 immigrants and representatives of the states of the Union is still a very young nation and the United States has not yet had a full century of existence as a nation. The overwhelming majority of Americans can relate to the great excitement of the American Revolution as it stretched from the west coast of the United States to the Caribbean and on to the other side of the Atlantic. The American Revolution was a mass movement that succeeded in calling people together in order to seek individual rights but also to establish a republican system of government based on equal rights and subject to the rule of
